Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from An Address: Delivered at the Anniversary Meeting of the Zoological Club of the Linnean Society, Held at the Society s House, in Soho-Square, November 29, 1828 The principles of this arrangement, which have only of late years been sought after with an ardour and a zeal commensurate with the importance of the subject, may now be considered as founded on a firm and immutable basis, established by observation and experience, and illumined by reason and philosophy. - Gentlemen, it would be an act of supererogation on my part, and a mockery of your knowledge, to enter into any detail respecting the works on animals written by Aristotle, Pliny, and other ancient authors, or even to notice further the labours of those illustrious naturalists who, although long mouldered into dust, still live in posthumous fame! I cannot, however, on the present occasion omit a passing tribute to the memory of the great man, the second centenary of whose nativity we all hope this night to celebrate in a manner worthy of his merits, and of the esteem in which they are universally held. To the light diffused upon zoological science by the writings of our immortal Ray, whose comprehensive mind embraced every department of Natural History, and illustrated them all with nearly equal felicity, we are indebted for those clear notions of scientific arrangement, the scintillations of his brilliant genius, on which all our present systems are confessedly founded. If then in later times we cannot produce upon the muster roll of British Zoologists, names which deserve to rank by the side of Linnaeus and of Cuvier; we may at least console ourselves with the reflection...
